

MARITIME GEOGRAPHY; PROF. LOWELL'S LECTURE

A most interesting lecture will be delivered before the National Geographic Society this evening by Prof. Percival Lowell, director of the Lowell Observatory of Flagstaff, Arizona, on "The Geography of Mars." Prof. Lowell was the first man to advance the theory of human habitation on the planet, as well as the discoverer of its canals, and holds among many others the Janssen medal of the French Astronomical Society for researches on Mars.

Prof. Lowell organized and sent the recent expedition to the Andes for maritime observation, and his lecture will be illustrated with a wonderful series of photographs of the planet. The lecture, which is in the regular course presented before the members of the National Geographic Society, will be held at the National Rides Armory, 529 G street.

SENATOR GALLINGER BACK READY FOR CONGRESS WORK

Senator Gallinger of New Hampshire, chairman of the Senate District Committee, has returned to Washington after spending the holiday recess in his home State. He will introduce a number of District bills immediately after the recess, including one submitted by the Commissioners for the extension of Kenyon street, from Seventeenth street to Mt. Pleasant street, and the extension of Seventeenth street from Kenyon street to Irving.
